UNIVERSITÄT
BERN

The Institute of Social Anthropology at the University of Bern seeks to appoint a

Full-time PhD researcher

For the project Leaving the Party: Former Kurdish Rebels and the Remaking of Post-Revolutionary Subjectivities in Iraqi Kurdistan and the European Diaspora, for the duration of four years.

Funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNSF), and led by Dr Isabel Käser, the project explores processes of disengagement, migration, and bordering through the life stories of former Kurdish rebels who left various political and armed movements throughout the history of the Kurdish struggle for self-determination. This project focuses on both women and men, who went from being revolutionaries, to asylum seekers and refugees - and in the case of Iraqi Kurdistan returnees - and asks how former rebels navigate the gendered processes of demilitarisation, different borders regimes, and questions around deservingness of protection as they disentangle themselves from the armed struggle and rebuild a civilian life.

The PhD candidate is expected to

- Design and conduct an independent research project on the intersection of masculinity, militarism, migration and “would be”-state-making in the context of Iraqi Kurdistan (PUK/KDP)
- Conduct ethnographic fieldwork in Europe with potential trips to Iraqi Kurdistan
- Contribute to academic publications
- Support the team with organisational and administrative tasks

Required qualifications

- MA in Social Anthropology or related fields (Migration and Border Studies, Gender Studies, Middle East Politics, Kurdish Studies)
- Experience in working with qualitative methods and ethnographic fieldwork
- Good knowledge of the anthropology of the Middle East and migration
- Excellent writing skills in English
- Good communication skills in Kurdish (Sorani or Kurmanci) and German are an advantage
- Proficient organisational and communication skills
